

John Chubb was born in 1746, the son of Jonathan Chubb, a Bridgwater timber and wine merchant. John wanted to become a professional artist, but his father did not approve of the idea, and eventually he carried on the family business. John took an active part in town politics, and was Mayor of Bridgwater in 1788. Later in his life he was active in the local campaign to abolish the Slave Trade.

While his father ran the family business, John Chubb had plenty of spare time to spend on drawing and writing poetry, not to earn a living but for his own amusement. He painted not only local scenery, which makes an important record of what Bridgwater and its surroundings looked like in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, but also lots of portraits of his family, local businessmen, doctors, clergy, local Members of Parliament and suchlike. Many of his portraits relate to working tradesmen and craftsmen working with their tools. Some of his writings contain witty pen portraits of local figures – and as he was not being paid for the work he did not have to flatter them!

Possibly Miss Webber

As a teenager, John visited relations in London and more than 50 letters between him and his family at this time are in the collection. The collection includes correspondence from a leading politician of the time, Charles James Fox, and a letter from the poet Samuel Taylor Coleridge, written at Nether Stowey in 1797 – at the time when Coleridge was writing one of his most famous poems “The Rime of the Ancient Mariner”. as well as Chubb’s own comments on local politicians in verse. There are account and memorandum books, showing the Chubb family’s activities in a busy merchant town. There are also personal letters written by the Chubbs shedding light on their lives in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Three hundred and sixty sketches and finished drawings and a number of documents were kept together by his daughter after his death in 1818, and, most unusually, were kept together by the Chubb family ever since. The collection was mostly made between 1761 and around 1800 although there are also some letters written by his Somerset ancestors going as far back as the 1650s.

Mr Wise

For the past 30 years, sixty of the pictures have been on loan from John Chubb’s descendants to the Blake Museum. At the end of 2002, the family decided to sell the entire collection and offered it in the first instance to Blake Museum. Thanks to local support and help from a number of national grant-giving bodies, in 2004 Blake Museum reached its appeal target of £123,000 to save over 300 unique historic original watercolour paintings and documents with an important link to Bridgwater’s history.

Heritage Lottery Fund contributed £88,000 in the light of local contributions from Sedgemoor District Council, the Friends of Blake Museum and other local organisations and individuals, which amounted to about £9,700. Other national organisations that contributed were the MLA/V&A Purchase Grant Fund (£15,000), and the National Art Collections Fund (£10,00).

Two men riding

The paintings by John Chubb which we display at Blake Museum are crucial to visitors' understanding of Bridgwater in the late 18th century. We have documents and tombstones that give us names of Bridgwater people, but only Chubb's portraits tell us what they actually looked like.

Mr Jeffery

The way in which John Chubb portrayed the people around him really brings the town to life. He painted for his own enjoyment, not for commercial gain, so he depicted whatever subjects he wanted to. Also he painted local characters who would not have been able to afford an artist to paint their portrait. The pictures have many uses in Blake Museum, and their acquisition is a big gain in telling our visitors about the history of Bridgwater.

Miss A. Follett

Blake Museum is run by Bridgwater Town Council and managed by the Friends of Blake Museum (Registered Charity 1099815) with support from Sedgemoor District Council.

As well as material about Bridgwater, the Museum covers the villages in the area extending from East and West Huntspill in the north to Thurloxton in the south and from Ashcott in the east to beyond Nether Stowey in the west.

The Museum has collections relating to archaeology and local history, Robert Blake, the Duke of Monmouth and the Battle of Sedgemoor, shipping and the docks, the local merchant and artist John Chubb (1746-1818). There is a large photographic collection.

Blake Museum, 5 Blake Street,
Bridgwater, Somerset, TA6 3NQ
Tel 01278 456127

Tuesday – Saturday 10.00am – 4.00pm
Closed during the winter

Email blake@bridgwatermuseum.org.uk
Website www.bridgwatermuseum.org.uk

Please be aware that you are visiting an old building. You will find that some floors are uneven and there are changes of level. Take care and enjoy your visit.

Version 2:1

Bridgwater Town Council

John Chubb (1746-1818)
Blake Museum Collection

THE CHUBB COLLECTION
a brief guide

BLAKE MUSEUM BRIDGWATER

Accredited
Museum